Buying your first home? Get help from the experts with this KFPL presentation

First-time home buyers face unique challenges when entering the real estate market. High demand for housing, limited inventory and real estate prices can make it difficult to negotiate the buying process. Local real estate agent Erin Gallagher and mortgage agent Melissa Forman will help would-be homebuyers navigate this life change during an online workshop on March 4 from 11 a.m.-noon.

Those in attendance will gain valuable knowledge to help make informed decisions when purchasing their first home including getting pre-approved, incentives for first-time home buyers, finding the right home and putting in an offer.

“Kingston's real estate market changed significantly during the pandemic, and first-time home ownership is intimidating at the best of times,” said Jake Miller, Librarian, Adult Programming. “Buying a home is a significant investment and having the right information and guidance to make the best decisions is important. This event will give people the resources they need.”

The presentation is free to attend, and registration is required. Interested individuals can register by visiting <https://calendar.kfpl.ca/event/7924312> or calling (613) 549-8888.
